My Role Model/Temple Grandin

Temple Grandin is my role model. She was born in Boston, U.S.A, in 1947. From early life, she had a passion for animals. Temple was autistic and she felt uncomfortable about people touching her. She loved animals and this connection helped her deal with having autism.

Temple's house was in the countryside, and she often visited her grandmother's farm. This strengthened Temple's love for animals. Being around them brought her great joy.

Temple is my role model because she strived to help animals in need, and she educated others about the importance of suitable living conditions for livestock. Temple improved the lives of many animals in captivity, by making cages bigger and more like their natural habitat. It is admirable that while doing all this, Temple was autistic.

In the future, I want to be a renowned veterinarian, someone who improves the lives of animals. I would love to continue Temple's legacy as she is an inspiration for me to try hard and never give up.
